Number one spot globally for sustainability for Tassal

Tasmanian salmon producer Tassal has been benchmarked as the world's top salmonid company in an international report on sustainability reporting and transparency.

The seafoodintelligence.com report, which used 150 key performance indicators, includes a sustainability reporting and transparency ranking and rating of the world's top 35 salmonid producing firms, of the world's top 10 salmonid feed producers and of the world's main 16 farming representative organisations.

The report also contains substantial information about the global salmon industry in 2015/16, production figures and outlooks, notes on biological fish health and sustainability, corporate governance and comparative key financials.

The report's authors congratulated Tassal for the publication of its fifth Sustainability Report, which they said was well designed and equally well written and had not disappointed.

"There are so many insightful comments in terms of sustainability and salmon farming that we'd strongly recommend that some other salmon farmers and aspiring sustainability reporters make the Tassal report bedside reading," the report said.

The annual seafoodintelligence.com report is prepared to help key salmon farming industry players, retailers, environmental organisations and all stakeholders assess the level of proactive and voluntary transparency and communication when it comes to corporate, social and environmental sustainability reporting.

The report is also designed to help salmon farming companies aspiring to a higher level of sustainability reporting to compare and benchmark their performances with that of their competitors and leaders in the field.
